Moving beyond the fractured future of ‘the technique’:

Arguments for slow science, serendipity and creativity in a neoliberal academic market

Dawn Mannay – mannaydi@Cardiff.ac.uk
Overview

- Research Overview
- Contextualising the Presentation
- Train Journeys
- The Waiting Field
- Recommendations
- Concluding Remarks
- Questions
Research and Teaching

- Dawn Mannay
- Mothers and Daughters on the Margins: Gender, Generation and Education
- Melanie Morgan
- Motherhood and Mature Studentship: a Psychosocial Exploration
- No entry?
- Visual methodologies lectures
- Dissertation supervision
- Mutual concerns
Teaching and Supervising

- Tomorrow’s ethnographers?
- Anxiety expressed by students in the planning of their independent piece of research
- Avoid ‘troublesome knowledge’ (Orsini-Jones 2010: 341)
- Lack epistemic cognition (Avramides and Luckin 2007)
But…

- Unfair to frame students’ epistemic cognition as lacking?
- Students work hard to gain mastery of theoretical and conceptual material
- If mastery is not transferred into the active process of individual research projects this could be tied to the compartmentalised teaching of research methods in lectures and textbooks
- And the wider landscape
Qualitative Landscapes

- ‘methods and debates over methods are prisms through which to understand the changing social and economic expectations placed upon qualitative research’ (Mills and Ratcliffe, 2012)
- What has changed in the sociopolitical and economic landscape that could serve to close down ethnographic spaces?
Closing down ethnographic spaces

- Neoliberal educational landscape
- Quick and dirty
- Move away from exploratory and long-term fieldwork
- Move towards more tightly defined commercial frames
- Fracturing of qualitative methodologies
- Anthropology and employability
Methodological Instrumentalism

- Push for efficiency potentially narrows the opportunities to engender ‘the unpredictable, the tangential and the creative’: so that all that remains is ‘methodological instrumentalism’ (Mills and Ratcliffe, 2012: 152)
Methodological Choices (?)

- Latest and greatest techniques
- Over-reliance on interview data (Atkinson and Coffey 2002)
- Arguments against autoethnography (Delamont 2007)
- Limitation of participatory visual methods (Packard 2008)
Techniques, methods or methodologies?

- Fragmented view of research
- Lack of epistemic cognition
- Can we move beyond ‘the technique’ and draw on wider ethnographic practice to make the most of our research journey?
- Ethnographic base in a family of methods (Lincoln 2012)
Valuing the In-between

- Conducted interviews and employed visual methods of data production in our research (Mannay 2015; Mannay and Morgan 2015)
- But our writing and conversations with each other have also reinforced the importance of our time in the field ‘waiting’ to engage in these research techniques
- Waiting time in research is neither empty nor without use; and in times of waiting we often learn new things about our participants and ourselves
- ‘waiting field’ – implicit to the explicit
Tediously familiar or outdated?
Old Hat?

- Realise that the ‘waiting field’ is ‘old hat’ to many ethnographers… who set out on their research with this appreciation as implicit in their craft.

- However, experience in the field, the recent shifts in higher education, and our work with new generations of student researchers, necessitates a consideration of how to retain the salience of the in-between in contemporary qualitative inquiry.
‘Waiting Field’

- Offer reflections from our research diaries that document this waiting time; and the discoveries of others and of self doing ethnography in the ‘waiting field’
Waiting Spaces

- Spaces previous to
- Spaces of interruption/disruption
- Spaces of reflection
- Spaces in need of attention and appreciation
Carla had forgotten that I was coming over and was sat in her pyjamas watching ‘Under the Hammer’ with Patricia (her mother).

“I knew I was supposed to be doing something today but I couldn’t remember what” said Carla.
It has been raining and I am waiting for Mally outside her house in the rain and when she arrives we go inside. Before the interview Mally said “I will have to put the radiators on to dry my shoes as they are soaked through with rain”, and she puts her shoes on the radiator. “I’ve only got one pair” she explains, “there is never any money left for me after the kids”. This is the reality of living on low income, having to walk around in wet shoes. When your income gets higher you forget about these things, the every day inconveniences and the small miseries. I have walked around with holes in the only shoes I’ve got, wet, cold feet and bronchitis on top. It becomes normal at the time and is forgotten when you have more shoes than you really need.
Man Trouble

- Visitors and neighbours
- Fathers, sons and husbands
- Celebrations cancelled
- Theft and betrayal
- Advantages of small handbags
- Annoying but expected and accepted
- Tacit normalisation
These types of records are important for capturing aspects of mother’s and daughter’s every day lives, the barriers to education they face; and our reactions and reflections. The ethnographic experience is accessible within these waiting times; the times where real lives carry on before they make room for the intrusion of the data production techniques.
Jordan is 21 and lives with her mum and brother and 22 month old son. She has a very supportive family and during our interview at home her grandparents turned up to cut the grass. Jordan explained that she was in the middle of an interview but the grandparents insisted “they wouldn’t be any bother”. As a result the interview took place with the grandparents partially present, going back and forth between the living room and the garden – which really disrupted the interview. My mind went blank.
Cheryl has accused Tanya of being a bad mother on several occasions because of her attendance at university/placement (even threatening to call social services), particularly when the children are ill. Indeed during my visit Tanya’s home telephone and mobile rang at least a dozen times (it seemed constant). Twice I asked Tanya if she wanted me to stop so she could answer but she said “it’s only my sister and she will only have a go at me”. Within the working class post industrial communities in which we live there is often a pervasive cultural attitude: it is ok to do things as a woman as long as it doesn’t interfere with what are considered to be expectations of “care” and understandings of what a good mother is/does. I’m angry.
Waiting Rupture

A backroom view of an interrupted/disrupted space where the omnipresent, but often hidden, relational and affective aspects of being a working class mature student mother, partially emerge during critical ethnography.
Reflexive Waiting

- Across accounts
- Research diary
- Reflective and reflexive
- Empirical and methodological
- Acknowledging the ethnographic base
- Working with a ‘family of methods’
Recommendations

- High-speed, drive-by research climate
- Focus on applying ‘the technique’
- Side-lines the importance of ongoing traditional ethnographic and reflective engagement
- Students and new researchers may neglect the ‘waiting field’
- Centralising the salience of the ‘waiting field’ can produce more useful fieldwork
Concluding Remarks

- Visual, narrative and interview techniques are valid methods of inquiry.
- Embedded in traditional ethnography.
- ‘Waiting field’ is an opportunity to explore the times where real lives carry on before they make room for the intrusion of the data production techniques.
- Appreciation of discoveries of others and of self doing ethnography in the ‘waiting field’.
- More nuanced understanding of journeys, ruptures and barriers.
References

- Mannay, D. and Morgan, M. 2015. Doing ethnography or applying a qualitative technique?: Reflections from the 'waiting field'. Qualitative Research 28(2): 136-146.